THE PROVINCE

Ottawa LRT among city projects listed in budget

Haley Ritchie Metro | Ottawa

Free tuition for low-income students and funding for Ottawa's light-rail project — along with net debt clocking in at $308 billion this year — are some of the big-ticket items in the Ontario Liberal government's latest

Ottawa Mayor Jim Watson welcomed Thursday's provincial budget, saying it "sets the stage for a continued partnership for making our community stronger in Ottawa."

"Stage Two LRT was mentioned specifically in the budget documents and I'm pleased to see that it remains a priority for our provincial partners," he said.

The city is looking for $1 billion each from the federal and provincial governments for the second stage of its light-rail project, which would extend the network from Bayshore to Orleans and south to Riverside South.

system aimed at reducing Ontario's greenhouse-gas emissions — but which will also increase the cost of gas across the province. That plan won the approval of Ottawa's mayor, who says he also hopes to tap into to some of the money the province plans to spend on housing for projects in the capital.

The government intends to spend $52 million to build two new schools in Ottawa and to retrofit or build additions on four others. This will include 78 new child-care spaces.

Meanwhile, the Dave Smith Youth Treatment Centre in Ottawa will get $1.5 million for a new, 30-bed facility.

The city is also looking to the province to help pay for its initiatives to celebrate Canada's 150th birthday in 2017, Watson said.

'Ottawa will be one of the first at the table to pitch our programs and seek funding for our programs for 2017 initiatives," he said.

Yet the budget also contained a far more sobering figure: Net debt continues to swell. It is expected to grow to $308 billion this year which works out to $22,000 per Ontarian.

Minor hockey league express concerns over historical plan

Lucy Scholey Metro | Ottawa

Minor hockey league officials say a historical new city policy on arena bookings may cost parents more in registration fees.

The city wants to update the rec and sports "allocation policy" to make room for new groups to book rinks, sports fields and ball diamonds. Under the current rules, these bookings are based on historical use from one season to the next.

But as more new teams —including many more for girls — vie for bookings, they're coming up short. The city is looking to smooth over "inequities" in the system. To do that, staff are proposing a new policy that puts more weight on the level of need, the number of participants and their proximity to facilities.

At the community and protective services committee on Thursday, Coun. Diane Deans, who chairs the committee, called it a "historical day" for sports in the city.

But Denis Dumais, president of Hockey Eastern Ontario Minor, takes issue with the proposed new arena cancellation fees. If approved, an organization that does not return ice within 30 days would not get a refund. This could complicate booking last-minute ice time for playoff hockey, he said.

"It's $300 an hour for private ice. That's an impact on parents. It's an impact on tax-payers," he said. "I realize that returning ice at the last minute is an impact on the city, so we need to work at that."

About 16,000 kids play minor hockey in Ottawa, including 600 girls. It costs about $500 to register, although that varies between associations. Staff say 15 per cent of the city's ice sat vacant last year, which costs taxpayers. Cost estimates were not available on Thursday.

If approved at council, the new policy will go into effect for arenas by the fall and fields and ball diamonds by spring 2017 COMMUNITY SERVICES

$30K for another week at the beach

Should Ottawa's supervised beaches open earlier in June, later in September, or both?

This was the hot debate on a wet, snowy Thursday at a community and protective services committee.

After hearing complaints the city prematurely closed its supervised beaches last summer, staff drummed up ways to keep four sandy shores open on the cheap.

They suggested staggering the opening and closing dates: Westboro and Petrie Island beaches would be supervised from June 25 to Aug. 28, and Mooney's Bay and Britannia from June 18 to Aug. 21. But some councillors said this was not enough.

The current beach season lasts 58-65 days. It would cost the city about $30,000 to tack on another week of beach season in June or $16,000 for a weekend in the same month.

Knoxdale-Merivale Coun. Keith Egli said extending the beach season may be worth dipping into an unforeseen fund for the cash to do so.

"I don't even have a beach in my ward, but I think it's important we have operating beaches throughout the city and we keep them all open as long as we can," he said.

It's important we have operating beaches in the city.

EMERGENCY SERVICES

Dozen new medics may not be enough

A dozen new paramedics may not be enough to beef up the City of Ottawa's strained rural resources, according to the head of emergency services.

Anthony Di Monte, acting general manager of emergency and protective services, said 12 new paramedics will help cover the population growth levels in 2015 — but not in subsequent years.

In the beginning of 2015, there was an 11 per cent increase in the number of emergency calls compared to the previous year. For the most life-threatening calls, the response time dipped to 72.6 per cent, which is below the provincial 75 per cent target.

Rural councillors Eli El-Chantiry (West Carleton-March) and George Darouze (Osgoode) tabled a notice of motion calling for 12 new paramedics and four new emergency vehicles. Combined, it would cost about $1 million.

AFFECTED

Good news: Post-secondary students from lowincome families stand to benefit the most from the fiscal plan. Starting in 2017-18, the province will create the Ontario Student Grant. Tuition will be free for students from families with incomes up to $50,000 who attend any college or university in Canada. More than half of students from families with incomes up to $83,000 will receive non-repayable grants that exceed the average tuition.

CAP AND TRADE

Good news: Proceeds from cap-and-trade, designed to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, are projected to be $1.9 billion in 2017 — up from last year's projection of $1.3 billion — and will be used to invest in green projects and climate change initiatives.

Bad news: The average natural gas cost to households will increase $5 per month, while the price of gasoline will go up about $4.3 cents per litre, about $8 per month.

AND WINE

Bad news: The cost of cigarettes and wine is going up. There will be a $3 increase in the price of a carton of 200 cigarettes, effective Friday, and the tobacco tax will rise with inflation each year over the next five years. The minimum price for a bottle of wine rises to $7.95 over the next three years, and there will be a series of increases in the ad valorem tax on wine, starting with a two percentage point hike in June.

HEALTH CARE

Good news: Hospital funding is increasing by $345 million. Of that, $130 million will be spent on cancer-care services and $75 million is earmarked for community-based residential hospices and palliative care. The government will also spend $333 million over five years on autism services. Bad news: The Ontario Health Coalition and the Ontario Nurses' Association said the funding is a great step but isn't enough to make up for four years of frozen hospital budgets.

Good news: Single seniors earning up to $19,300 a year will be eligible for cheaper drugs beginning August, compared with the previous threshold of $16,018. Couples with an income of up to $32,300 will also be eligible, where before only those earning $24,175 qualified. The costs will be offset by raising deductibles and co-payments for seniors above the new income thresholds.

Cassandra Galbraith of Windsor Park Village may well become Ottawa's youngest licensed driver when she goes for her driver's licence test on her leap day birthday. In leap years, she will be turning four, though her mom will be putting 16 candles on Cassandra's birthday cake to mark her Sweet 16. ERIN MCCRACKEN/METROLAND MEDIA

The oddest birthday

Youth ready to start driving at the age of four

When Cassandra Galbraith tests for her driver's licence in a matter of days, she'll likely become Ottawa's youngest driver.

"It's a possibility," she said with a laugh.

That's because she'll be turning just four years old in leap years, though she'll be celebrating her Sweet 16 on Feb. 29.

'It's nice to have a unique birthday," said Galbraith, who lives in Windsor Park Village south of the Hunt Club community. "When it's my actual birthday I can say, 'Oh, look, I have an actual birthday this year.' It's a lot more special."

Leap years are big in her house.

Every four years, the leapling's mom, Tracy, takes Cassandra on a big trip. This summer, they may jet off to Ireland to celebrate. Four years ago, the pair travelled to Cuba and four years before that they went to Disneyland.

In keeping with tradition, Galbraith said she chooses to celebrate her birthday in nonleap years on Feb. 28, rather than on March 1.

"I celebrate on the 28th because I feel I'd rather celebrate my birthday in the actual month I was born in," she said.

Her birth date also prompts a host of questions from friends and classmates at St. Francis Xavier Catholic High School in Riverside South.

"Everybody's like, 'Wait, you're how old?' That's always the first question I get asked," the Grade 11 student said with a chuckle in her voice. "I actually got asked once if I was able to get a driver's licence when I turn 16, considering I'm only four."

They also ask which date she celebrates her birthdays during non-leap years, as well as how she marks the special occasion.

She is planning to spend her actual leap day birthday this year with family and her best friend, Lovelyn, who lives across the street.

met someone who shared the same unique birth date was last year. Her teacher asked students about their birthdays and Galbraith learned one of her classmates is also a leapling. "It's funny because we were in the same science class last year, and when the teacher asked us about our birthdays and we both said 'leap day,' we both kind of got the same questions and we were looking at each other and laughing," Galbraith recalled.

People often remind her that though she will be turning another year older, in fact, she will never really catch up to others her age.

"That's another thing a lot of people tell me, 'You know what? You'll be young forever," she said with a laugh.

Rezoning would pave way for new mixed-use buildings

The first step in the transformation of Westgate Shopping Centre has landed on the city planning department's desk.

An Official Plan and zoning bylaw amendment has been filed on behalf of RioCan Management with the intent of turning the aging mall and parking lot into a high-density, mixed-use population centre.

A Dec. 16 pub-

residents to inquire about the plan with lic meeting allowed city councillors and representatives from FoTenn Consultants,

RioCan's applicant. Models of what the site would look like during the three main phases of construction — spread out over a period of 15 to 20 years — were available for viewing. RioCan's application calls for sitespecific zoning that would revise the arterial mainstreet zoning that's already in place. The company is seeking permits for a maximum height of 22 storeys for two buildings fronting on Carling Avenue, a maximum height of 36 storeys for buildings fronting onto Highway 417 (at the rear of the property), and a blended minimum parking rate for visitor and commercial parking.

In total, the redevelopment would contain 8,230 square metres of commercial space and 1,146 residential units.

The first phase of the development, which will eventually see the entire mall demolished, will remove the standalone restaurant at the corner of Carling and Merivale Road, replacing it with a mixed-use building within five years. The second phase would remove the portion of the mall at the southwest corner of the site with a similar development, within a five- to 10-year time frame. METROLAND MEDIA

Police ID latest murder victim

Joe Lofaro Metro | Ottawa

Police have identified the victim of the city's fourth murder of the year — and the second in two days — as a 20-year-old Ottawa man.

Taylor Morrow-Flint was shot dead in the 80 block of Ritchie Street at around 7:30 p.m. Wednesday. Police have yet to make an arrest and are asking witnesses to come forward.

Two days ago, the Ottawa police major crime unit was called to the east end for a fatal stabbing of a male teenager at a park in Overbrook.

High hopes for new play equipment

Clothing drive planned for Saturday

Prince of Peace Catholic elementary school's parent council is envisioning a whole new level of play for students in kindergarten to Grade 6.

The volunteers are beginning their quest to raise enough funds to cover the cost of two new play structures at the school, estimated at between $80,000 and $100,000.

The goal is to hopefully raise the money in the next couple of years and replace the school's current play structure, which dates back about two decades.

The play structure is pretty old and we've been repairing it," said school principal Stephen Gay. "It's a rather small play structure.

At this time, primary students in kindergarten to Grade 3 are only allowed to play on it.

But with two new and larger — structures, the primary kids will be able to play on one while Grade 4 to 6 students will be able to have fun on the other.

"It'll be great for the kids," said Gay, who is in his fourth year as principal. "It gives them a lot of opportunity for exercise and creative play outside, and they need that."

The school certainly has the room for the new additions within a massive fenced yard.

It gives them a lot of opportunity for exercise and creative play outside, and they need that.

Stephen Gay

The task now is to raise the funds.

"The board does give us a small amount compared to the overall price, so they do help," Gay said.

Then the council or the school needs to raise the remainder."

Parents were polled in December to gauge how they would like the parent committee to spend the money it does generate. Most of the comments supported new play equipment for the school yard,

The council is no stranger to fundraisers, having held them in the past to pay for new books for reading programs, Christmas hampers for families, field trips, such as a visit to the National Arts Centre to take in a symphony performance, as well as iPads and Chromebooks for student use and other high-tech gadgets for classrooms.

The committee is also helping to offset the cost of the school's first ski field trip this winter.

But now the group of volunteers is looking to hold largerscale events to generate more

Spurred on by their quest to give their playground fund a big boost, the council will host its inaugural clothing drive on Saturday, Feb. 27, from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m., at two sites: St. Patrick's Catholic High School at 2525 Alta Vista Dr., and at the Albion-Heatherington Community Centre, located at 1560 Heatherington Rd.

High court overturns acquittal of schoolteacher

Foreign Affairs Minister Stephane Dion said the Canadian government "is deeply dismayed and shocked" by an Indonesian Supreme Court decision to overturn the acquittal of Canadian schoolteacher Neil Bantleman.

In its decision, the high court also ordered both Bantleman and an Indonesian teaching assistant to serve 11 years in prison instead of the 10 years they initially received for sexually abusing three young children at a prestigious international school in Jakarta.

Bantleman and Ferdinant Tijong were sentenced in April 2015 but maintained their innocence and filed appeals to the High Court, which acquitted them last August.

Supreme Court spokesman Suhadi said a three-member judge panel handed down its verdict on Wednesday based on

The judge panel concluded that the defendants were proven to have violated the 2007 Child Protection Law," said Suhadi, who uses a single name. "It did not only reinstate the District Court's verdict but also lengthened the sentence to 11 years."

The pair were also ordered to pay a $7,440 fine each or to serve six more months in jail.

Under Indonesian law, both Bantleman and Tijong still could challenge the sentence by filing for judicial review by the Supreme Court if they have new evidence.

"This decision is unjust, given the many grave irregularities throughout the various proceedings in this case and the fact that all evidence presented by the defence has systematically been rejected," Dion said in a statement early Thursday.

Chandra Saptaji, head of the general crime section at the South Jakarta Prosecutors' Office, said they are still looking for Bantleman, who is under a ban to leave the country. "Hopefully, he is co-operative and complying with Indonesia law." THE CANADIAN PRESS celebrate a birthday on the day she was actually born. The only thing less common for her is hassle-free paperwork.

BIRTHDAYS

Leap-year babies face myriad annoyances

Her status as a leap-year baby ensures that genuine birthday festivities are only possible once every four years. That same Feb. 29 birth date also creates dayto-day hassles that are all too common.

Online application forms insist leap day doesn't exist. Official insurance forms document the wrong birthday. And no matter what administrative process she's trying to tackle, she inevitably faces questions as to whether she was, in fact, born on leap day.

"We got married this past summer ... and when I wrote my birthday down, the commissioner asked me several times: 'You're sure that it's Feb. 29, right?" Pedersen said.

Skepticism about a Feb. 29 birthday is widespread, according to one organization that was formed in part to combat it.

The Honor Society of Leap Year Day Babies was created in 1997 not only to celebrate the unusual date, but to raise awareness of the challenges associated with it and to advocate for those affected by such hassles.

Co-founder Peter Brouwer will celebrate his 15th leap day birthday in Vancouver this year — he'll be 60, for those who struggle with multiplication. He says inconveniences caused by corporate or technological failure to recognize the day has resulted in serious problems for decades for leapers.

Leapers have experienced everything from webpage shutdowns to halted banking transactions due to the lack of familiarity with the date by authorities. He even recalled a society member who was accused of using a falsified driver's licence because of his date of birth.

The society mounted a few tongue-in-cheek campaigns along with more serious efforts to have companies reappraise their efforts to accommodate leapers.

Brouwer said recent years have seen a decisive shift in leapers' favour. "I think things have really improved," he said. "I have not had a problem entering Feb. 29 anywhere since I can remember." THE CANADIAN PRESS

🖶 LEAPERS FUN FACTS

Ever wondered why we have leap year? Here are a few facts to bring you up to speed:

Why do leap years exist?

Leap year is the reason that seasons occur at the same time each year. According to the Honor Society of Leap Year Day Babies, the Earth takes 365.24 days to make a complete cycle around the sun. Every four years, therefore, the world would be a full day out of sync with the calendar.

How does it work?

According to Irv Bromberg at the University of Toronto, "the Gregorian calendar has a 400-year repeat cycle, in which every year number divisible by four (2016, for example) has a leap day appended to February, except if the year number is divisible by 100, in which case it is a leap year only if the year number is also divisible by 400." For instance, the year 2000 was a leap year, while 1900 was not. Got that?

Canadians feel the real-estate squeeze: Poll

Thandi Fletcher Metro | Vancouver

Nearly half of people living in urban Canada say they're being squeezed by the cost of real estate, even in cities where prices pale in comparison to Vancouver and Toronto's sky-high markets, results of a new poll show.

Fifty-six per cent of Canadians, including those living in smaller real estate markets say housing prices in their neighbourhoods fall outside of what's "reasonable," according to an Angus Reid Institute poll.

In Edmonton, Calgary, Winnipeg, Montreal and Halifax, no fewer the 45 per cent of respondents view prices as either "high" or "unreasonably high," the poll results show. According to January data from the Canadian Real Estate Association, the percentage of people who feel that way also roughly mirrors the actual average cost of a home in each city.

Mumbai creates 16 selfie-free zones

Look around in any major Indian city, and you will find someone with an arm outstretched, mobile phone in hand, smiling widely and clicking away. Even Prime Minister Narendra Modi has embraced the medium, posting pictures online he's snapped with various world leaders.

But the pursuit of the most epic selfie can have lethal consequences.

Îndia is home to the highest number of people who have died while taking photos of themselves, with 19 of the world's 49 recorded selfie-linked deaths since 2014, according to San Francisco-based data service provider Priceonomics.

The statistic may in part be due to India's sheer size, with 1.25 billion citizens and one of the world's fastest-growing smartphone markets. Alarmed by the trend, Mumbai has declared 16 no-selfie zones across the city, as authorities warn people against taking unnecessarv risks.

Midwest buffeted by storm systems

Tornadoes tore through towns as far north as Pennsylvania, heavy snow cancelled hundreds of flights in the Midwest and power outages left tens of thousands of residents from the Carolinas to New England in the dark as severe weather raked across a broad swath of the country for a third day.

The storms Wednesday claimed at least a half-dozen lives, three of them in the tiny town of Waverly, Virginia, where a 2-year-old child and two men, ages 50 and 26, were killed during the storm, said Virginia State Police spokeswoman Corinne Geller. Their bodies were found about 300 yards from their mobile home.

At least five structures were damaged in the town of approximately 2,000 and roads leading into town had to be closed because of downed trees and debris tossed by winds gusting to 60 mph, Geller said.

Court OKs razing of migrant camp

State to evict hundreds of refugees from site near Calais

A French court gave the state the green light Thursday to raze makeshift tents and leantos used by hundreds of migrants at a sprawling slum in Calais, where many dream of slipping into Britain.

Tamping down fears of a violent confrontation, France's interior minister promised to treat the migrants humanely and not send in bulldozers to evict them.

The camp in the northern port city, known as "the Jungle," - has been an embarrassing chapter in Europe's migrant crisis, and France announced this month that its densely populated southern half would be razed. The move prompted rights groups and migrant advocates to sue.

The court in Lille ruled that the makeshift shelters used by the migrants can be destroyed, but that common spaces like places of worship, schools and a library must be left standing.

Calais' prime location, with a major ferry port, Eurotunnel rail system and truck traffic crossing the English Channel, has put it in the crosshairs of the migrant crisis. Weary travellers come driven by a dream that they will find peace and prosperity in English-speaking Britain. Lacking any papers, they have to sneak across the Channel, and at least 20 migrants have died trying since late June.

Officials say moving migrants out of the Calais slum will be a better solution for all, since many have been languishing in poverty and hopelessness after nearby borders have been sealed by increasing security. Officials estimate the number of migrants who will be affected at 800 to 1,000, while humanitarian organizations say over 3,000 migrants live there. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INTRODUCING: SCIENCE FRIDAYS February 26, 2016

Gravity does the wave

Nice job, Einstein. It's been a century since the super-smart physicist predicted the existence of gravitational waves, and three weeks since scientists announced they've directly detected them for the first time. It took us that long to stretch and warp our minds enough to understand how it is that space and time can be stretched and warped. Turns out this once-in-a-lifetime discovery is not as complicated, and way cooler, than it seems: It's a potential new tool to observe more of "what's out there" than we've ever dreamed of seeing before.

5 A NEW WINDOW INTO THE UNIVERSE "The history of astronomy was based on light. We started out with visible light, and then we came up with technology where we could see radio waves, gamma rays, x-rays. Now what we're observing is not just another form of light. It's completely new. Anything that's dark in the universe could be revealed to us by gravitational waves. That's the promise this holds."

HOW DID THEY DO IT?

With ginormous lasers — plus a lot of other complex instruments and powerful computers - arranged identically in Louisiana and Washington State so they can check each other's work. Here's how it works: One laser beam is split into two beams travelling away from each other at a 90-degree angle. Each beam travels straight ahead for four kilometres, and then is bounced off a mirror. The two halves of the beam meet up again and merge into one. If a gravitational wave passes through, the mirrors wobble in a very specific way that scientists can see by analysing the recombined beam. And that's what happened. "First the signal shakes Louisiana, then ten milliseconds later it shakes up Washington," University of Waterloo physicist Dr. Robert Mann told Metro. "And that is exactly how long it should take a gravity wave

Will talcum powder give me ovarian cancer?

to go through the earth."

I read this week that Johnson & Johnson had to pay $72 million to the family of a woman who died of ovarian cancer caused by talcum powder. I'm in my 60s and have used talcum powder for half my life. I'm officially terrified! Sincerely, Sandy in Winnipeg

Dear Sandy, The most important thing to know is that it's highly unlikely you'll get ovarian cancer, whether you use talc or not. About 1.3 per cent of women get ovarian cancer in their lifetimes. The greatest effect any study linking talc use to ovarian cancer showed around a 30 per cent increase in relative risk — meaning talc users would have something like a 1.69 per cent risk of getting ovarian cancer one day.

In ordinary life, it's helpful to think of time and space as constant and unchanging - as if, in the words of physicist Robert Mann, we all live and move around on a stage made of iron. But in reality, the stage is made of something like jelly. When a really massive object - like a black hole - steps onto the stage, the jelly sinks and bounces. Time can slow down or speed up. Space can expand or contract. And if a big enough shock to the system happens, a wave can ripple through the goo of space time - and

Johnson & Johnson lost its lawsuit because people in the corporation were told about the link and did not act on it.

But the evidence for the connection is mixed. Unlike smaller, older research papers on this issue, newer studies with larger samples failed to find increased cancer rates among talc users — including women who put baby powder in a diaphragm (Ew). I suspect that the link is a hangover from the pre-1970s days when talcum contained asbestos, which does cause cancer.

CUT OUT FOR THESE LOOKS?

STYLISH STARS ARE THEY Metro's Oscar fashion panel suggests three gowns ahead of Sunday's show. Dress the dolls yourself by clipping them out! NICHOLE JANKOWSKI METRO

Jillian Vieira is the fashion editor at The Kit, Canada's 360-degree beauty & style leader.

We've already seen Brie favour sexy cut-outs and slinky silhouettes this awards season. As a serious best actress contender, I'd love for her to have a cool-girl princess moment in a dramatic, tulle-heavy Giambattista Valli.

@DANIESQUE

Known to favour feminine silhouettes, Brie could seriously rock a Delpozo dress. She's already proven that she can wear colour — and Delpozo's ability to pair nearly-fluorescent hues with neutrals and pastels is unmatched.

@MICHELLEADDISONSTYLE

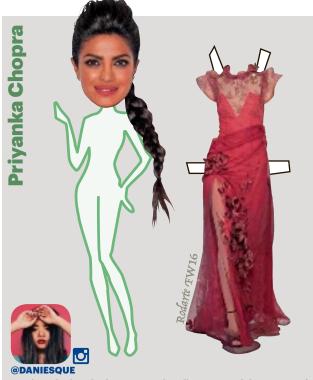

If I was her stylist I'd try to get her in a Giambattisa Valli frock (think Rihanna at the 2015 Grammys). Since her fellow nominees are known to wear lighter colours, I'd like to see her stand out in a

@JILLIANVIEIRA

There's very little Lupita can't pull off: flapper dresses, Grecian gowns and a one-piece column dress with cape have all earned her sartorial praise. A couture jumpsuit (à la Dior) would really solidify her Red Carpet Queen status.

@DANIESOUE

I'd love to see Lupita in Sid Neigum. While beautiful, her red carpet looks all follow similar silhouettes. Sid is known for dramatic, structured designs. Lupita could definitely pull off one of his runway-ready looks.

Dani Roche is a designer, creative director, and the owner of Kastor & Pollux, a Toronto design and experiences agency.

Rodarte is known for their fairy-tale-like esthetic, innovative use of materials, and unconventional details — and one of their dreamy dresses would be a great fit for Priyanka, who typically opts for embellished gowns on the red carpet.

@MICHELLEADDISONSTYLE

While it's likely Priyanka will choose white to present, I'd like to see her in red or even dusty rose. She should stay away from black and metallics. I would love her to wear American/Indian Designer Naeem Khan or even Dior.

@JILLIANVIEIRA

Priyanka has the bold-colourplus-body-hugging look mastered, which is why I'd like to see her graduate to new textures and fits. A draped, net-like dress (in an uber-flattering metallic finish like at Valentino) would do the trick.

The last time we saw Benicio Del Toro on screen he was starring in Sicario as a mercenary who collected a handsome paycheque while quenching his thirst for revenge against drug cartel leaders.

He was vicious and malicious, a supreme badass doing the right thing for the completely wrong

That movie's dark and gritty examination of the drug-fuelled Mexico-U.S. border war stands in stark contrast to his new movie, the optimistically titled A Perfect Day. "I do believe there is hope in A Perfect Day," he says. "I agree with you that Sicario is hopeless but in this one there is hope. I was finishing A Perfect Day when I went into Sicario. Perhaps that's one of the reasons Sicario was interesting, because it was the dark side of the coin."

Set in 1990s Balkans, Del Toro plays Mambrú, a misfit aid worker whose team (played by Tim Robbins and Olga Kurylenko among others) begin their day in the former Yugoslavia trying to remove a bloated corpse dumped in a well to contaminate the water.

The task is complicated by United Nations bureaucracy and the lack of a strong enough rope forcing the crew to navigate not only landmine-ridden roads but their own complicated relationships in search of a solution.

Director Fernando León de Aranoa calls Del Toro the centerpiece of the film, adding, "Working with him means working with a creative partner."

"There are some ideas that can come from anywhere that are golden," Del Toro says on improvising on set.

"I would like to say that I wish

I could recognize good ideas when they are out there whether they come from another actor or they come from myself.

"If there is a good idea I do believe that if you don't take advantage of it while you are making the film it'll be gone forever. If there is a good idea I am game to explore."

Del Toro, who is currently filming Star Wars: Episode VIII, says the script appealed to him because, it was about, "people trying to do good and just how complicated it can get, but with elements of humour.... It was like a riddle to solve," he says. "Can the movie balance these two things? I think it does. The darkness of the war and the job with the humour."

More importantly, he met with his character's real-life counterparts.

"I had met some aid workers and I will tell you, they all have a good sense of humour. They tell you some dark stories but they do have a sense of humour.

"It's a way of dealing with the darkness of their experiences and the pain."

TV DINNER JESSICA ALLEN

THELOSCARS

Right after a commercial break during the Academy Awards in 1987, the camera landed on host Chevy Chase. He was picking his nose. As a 12-year-old, this was the funniest thing I'd ever seen on television. I haven't missed an Oscar ceremony since.

I love them, although not everyone does. "The next morning, we all complain about how boring it was," New York Times film critic A.O. Scott recently wrote. "The morning after that we forget it all until the next year, when the show finds new ways to disappoint us." But Mr. Scott,

The Oscars provide me with an excuse to make an elaborate meal out of snacks, fancy wine and frozen food the disappointments are half the fun! Out of Africa outperforming both Witness and The Color Purple; Chariots of Fire upstaging On Golden Pond; Forest Gump eclipsing Pulp Fiction and The Shawshank Redemption; Birdman over Boyhood; Crash over any other movie ever made! And what about the upsets? Crowd pleasers, like Rocky, beating All the President's Men, Network and Taxi Driver in 1976, and more recently in 2010 The King's Speech reigning over True Grit, Winter's Bone and The Social Network.

This year, however, disappointment lies more with the Academy itself. For the second year in a row they've failed to nominate a minority for best acting, which will undoubtedly provide pointed material for Chris Rock, who will have his second crack at hosting the awards on Sunday

The Academy's president promises to fix this by reviewing their recruitment efforts. Meanwhile, a far less meaningful remedy will be provided for those long acceptance speeches by way of a ticker at the bottom of the screen listing thank-yous, saving both time and embarrassment: No longer will an actor risk marital discord — Hillary Swank in 2000, Sean Penn in 2009 (both, coincidentally, divorced) - by forgetting to thank their spouse.

Who knows, maybe this year, the Academy will get it right: "Every once in a while whether out of honesty, coincidence or a bizarre outbreak of good taste - those pasty old members make a choice that reflects both the state of the art and the reality of the culture," Scott said. "Mostly, though, they manage to stage an elaborate pseudoevent and to bamboozle millions of people into paying attention. In a way, the scandal of this year's nominees confirms what too few of us in our profession are willing to admit: that the Oscars don't matter except insofar as they provide answers to future trivia questions."

Maybe — but they also provide me with an excuse to make an elaborate meal out of snacks, fancy wine and frozen food, which has been my Oscar spread for a decade now: I'm talking crostini topped with charcuterie, cheese, bruschetta-style tomatoes, guacamole, a shrimp ring, plus jalapeño poppers and mozzarella sticks, all washed down with a Nuits-Saint-Georges Burgundy.

There's not really a main course, although the calorie count easily surpasses 2,000. The point is that I can graze during the three-hour ceremony while I'm watching Twitter for fashion analysis, desperately looking for Jack Nicholson's return to the front row, tallying how many Oscars Spotlight picks up and trying to stay awake to see Leo finally get his Academy Award.

Jessica Allen is the digital correspondent on CTV's The Social.

Gaga to sing her Oscarnominated song at show

Lady Gaga, a survivor of sexual assault, says performing Til It Happens to You — her song about sexual abuse on campuses — at Sunday's Academy Awards will feel liberating and emancipating.

Gaga, 29, was sexually assaulted when she was 19. Til It Happens to You, written with Diane Warren and a nominee for best original song, appears in The Hunting Ground, a documentary about sexual assault on college campuses that was directed by Kirby Dick.

The pop star said earning her first Oscar nomination for a song about a serious and heavy topic "makes it extra-special." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

#OscarsSoWhite reflects Academy Awards' cultural disconnect

Richard Crouse For Metro Canada

A friend is boycotting the Academy Awards because his favourite film of 2015, Star Wars: The Force Awakens, didn't make the Oscar's Best Picture list.

The awards, he says, aren't relevant because they ignore genre movies and in this particular case, have snubbed the most financially successful film of the year. In fact, the old canard that the Academy doesn't honour genre movies with Best Picture nods has been shot down this year with nominations for The Martian and Mad Max: Fury Road.

The Oscar folks also gave The Force Awakens five nominations and in recent years Inception, Avatar, District 9, Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King and Django Unchained have all earned top nods with Avatar and LOTR taking home the gold.

Genre movies do just fine with the Academy. No need for C-3PO to cry little metal tears. To the Academy's credit, not recognizing the year's box office behemoth while giving Room, a modestly grossing movie, Best Picture, Actress, Directing and Adapted Screenplay nods, actually suggests the Academy will not be wowed by wheelbarrows of cash.

Perhaps the truth is that the Oscars, and awards shows in general, are only as relevant as you want them to be. Are they as important as the Republican debates? It's all just show biz, so maybe. Ultimately, unless you're an actor, a director or a shareholder in a nominated film the Oscars are probably not extremely significant to your life. I pay attention to them as a function of my job, and I enjoy them, but this year I'm on board with my friend but for different reasons.

I'm disappointed in Oscar's failure to acknowledge diversity. For the second year in a row all 20 acting nominations went to white actors. To be clear I'm not implying the Academy is overtly racist. There are too many voters for there to be a conspiracy to keep actors of colour out of the headline categories. Have you ever gone to a restaurant with more than 10 people and tried to get everyone to agree on an appetizer for the table? It's nearly impossible. Now imagine trying to arrange collusion between 6,000 members of the Academy. Totally hopeless.

So if it's not a conspiracy why were stellar performances from Creed's Michael B. Jordan, The Hateful Eight's Samuel L. Jackson, Sicario's Benicio Del Toro, Beasts of No Nation's Idris Elba or any of Straight Outta Compton's top line cast not nominated? I think it's a combination of studio decision makers, who tend to be white, male and older coupled with the same demographic of voters at the Academy.

It's a systemic issue being addressed by Academy president Cheryl Boone Isaacs' effort to mould the Academy's membership to be more in line with the population.

Until the Oscars represent the full width and breadth of the best in Hollywood, regardless of race or gender, they will continue to slide toward irrelevancy. My guess is that the most interesting part of this year's ceremony won't be who wins Best Actor but host Chris Rock's opening monologue, which, if the movie gods prevail, will address the situation in no uncertain terms. It's a speech I'm predicting will be just as entertaining and provocative as any of the nominees, Star Wars: The Force Awakens included.

ACADEMY AWARDS AS LIGHTNING ROD

Outspoken at the Oscars

This year the #OscarsSoWhite movement made the Academy Awards a lightening rod for debate but the diversity issue is only the latest Oscars controversy.

1 Marlon Brando In 1973 Marlon Brando made headlines when he sent Sacheen Littlefeather to refuse the Best Actor statue for his work in The Godfather. In a prepared statement she said Brando declined the award because of "the treatment of American Indians today by the film industry and on television and in movie reruns." The speech was met with boos and later Clint Eastwood said, "I don't know if I should present this award on behalf of all the cowboys shot in John Ford westerns over the years," as he presented the Best Picture award.

2 Vanessa Redgrave

Five years later as the Jewish Defense League burned effigies of pro-Palestinian activist Vanessa Redgrave outside the Dorothy Chandler Pavillion, the Julia actress accepted the Best Actress award inside. Drawing gasps from the audience she said she "refused to be intimidated by the threats of a small bunch of Zionist hoodlums." Later screenwriter Paddy Chayefsky said, "I'm sick and tired of people exploiting the Academy Awards for the propagation of their own personal propaganda," to rapturous applause.

3 Sarandon and Robbins Chayefsky's scolding didn't seem to stick as actors continued to use the Oscar stage as a platform. In 1993 a trifecta of actors made the ceremony the most political ever. Best Film Editing presenters Susan Sarandon and Tim

Robbins criticized the government for incarcerating 266 HIV virus-infected Haitians in Guantanamo Bay while Richard Gere commented on human rights abuses in China. Show producer Gil Cates was outraged. "Does anyone care about Richard Gere's comments about China?" he said. "It's arrogant."

REASONS TO WATCH THE FILM INDEPENDENT SPIRIT AWARDS

Can't get enough of Hollywood's award season? The Film Independent Spirit Awards is just the ticket. The star-studded annual event, now in its 31st year, honours the best achievements in independent film. The ceremony is held in a tent on Santa Monica Beach, with a dollop of Oscar pageantry and a full helping of Golden Globe irreverence. It's a chance to see the industry's top talent chill out, pat each other on the back, and potentially say something they'll regret for a full year. Here are 5 other reasons to tune in:

- 1. The hosts. What do Kristen Bell, Steve Coogan, John Waters and Seth Rogan have in common? They've all hosted the Spirit Awards. This year, the show boasts Kate McKinnon and Kumail Nanjiani. McKinnon is a current Saturday Night Live cast member, famous for her dead-on impressions (including Justin Bieber!). Her co-host, Nanjiani, is an accomplished stand-up with a growing resume of feature films, including Sex Tape and
- 2. Behind the scenes bits. Last year, Fred Armisen's hysterical parody of Birdman saw him bob frantically through the show's backstage on a single-take adventure that led him to find actor Miles Teller pounding a live drum kit — a reference to Teller's Spirit-nominated film Whiplash.
- 3. Sauciness in the spotlight. Nothing says "unceremonious" like the promotional-size bottles of booze on every table at this gala dinner. This show is the setting for such moments as Michael Moore famously condemning George W. Bush. It's the setting for Jared Leto, accepting the award for Best Supporting Male for Dallas Buyers Club, who thanked everyone from Pink Floyd to the inventor of the zipper.
- 4. The unexpected takes centre stage. Anything can happen. Like the time director Michel Hazanavicius arrived with a full police escort from LAX just in time to receive his Best Director award for The Artist.
- 5. A real connection to film. Sure, it's cool to see everyone from Daniel Radcliffe and Bradley Cooper to Jane Fonda and Bruce Willis breaking bread and chugging drinks together. But it's even cooler to know why they're there. The show helps filmmakers make their movies, it builds an audience for their projects and helps diversify the film industry.

from 1976.

"That's the film that let me understand the tone of all those rock n' rollers the best — seeing them in their element up on stage performing," recalls Dragons drummer Daniel Platzman from New York. "That was something that was really important to me going into this — trying to capture that feeling of the authentic concert-going experience."

Fans can soak up that authentic experience on March 2, when theatres across Canada premiere Imagine Dragons: Smoke + Mirrors Live a colossal concert movie that features the Las Vegas quartet playing their biggest hits. Making the movie even more unique, the global hitmakers decided to document their show in Canada - specifically, Toronto.

"Everytime we've come to Toronto we've been given an insane welcoming," insists the 29-year-old multi-platinum selling artist. "Even before we were able to play at the Air Canada Centre, we remember playing clubs and everyone's just had a great attitude. So when timing for the film came up, it was the obvious choice.

As the film showcases, there are 15,000 screaming fans in Toronto that adore Imagine Dragons as well. And while many acts might've settled for selling that showpiece on iTunes or other digital formats, Imagine Dragons felt it was crucial to get their show onto the big screen.

"It was entirely a cinematic event for all of us," says Platzman. "We really wanted to bring that live experience as authentically to people in a movie theatre as we could (and) we're always trying to stay as true to the authentic show as possible."

Music fans should expect their favourite songs — from the band's hits Radioactive and Demons to an inspired take on an old 1984 classic. In fact, Imagine Dragons have covered all the bases, even the one thing all concert movies should have — a bombastic drum solo. "I agree," Platzman laughs. "More drum solos in general would make the world a better place."

Anthony Mackie: The most famous actor you've never heard of

Steve Gow For Metro Canada

Anthony Mackie has played everything from a bomb-defusing soldier in The Hurt Locker to a high-flying Falcon in the Captain America movies. The 37-year-old actor's latest sees him as a crooked cop in the heist thriller Triple 9. We caught up with Mackie to investigate why he's the most famous actor you've never heard of.

Anthony Mackie stars in Triple 9, which opens this weekend. CONTRIBUTED

Police matters

Playing a cop is familiar ground for Mackie having played 1940s gumshoes (Gangster Squad) and FBI agents (Runner, Runner). It's a role the New Orleans native clearly respects.

"Playing a police officer is really interesting to me because there's the code of the shield, it's a fraternity," said Mackie. "That was so important to me with this film — moreso than looking cool in a uniform or driving my car fast — it was showing that responsibility to that badge."

Mistaken identity

With over 40 films under his belt, Mackie is certainly recognizable — even if it's not always for his own work.

"When The Wire was on TV, the biggest joke was I was the most famous actor on The Wire who was never on The Wire," laughed Mackie about being confused with colleagues. "Now because of the whole Iron Man thing, I get Don Cheadle like

Real fiction

In May, Mackie may be replicating civil rights icon Martin Luther King, Jr. in the HBO adaptation of hit play All the Way but the actor insists he's not intimidated by real-life roles.

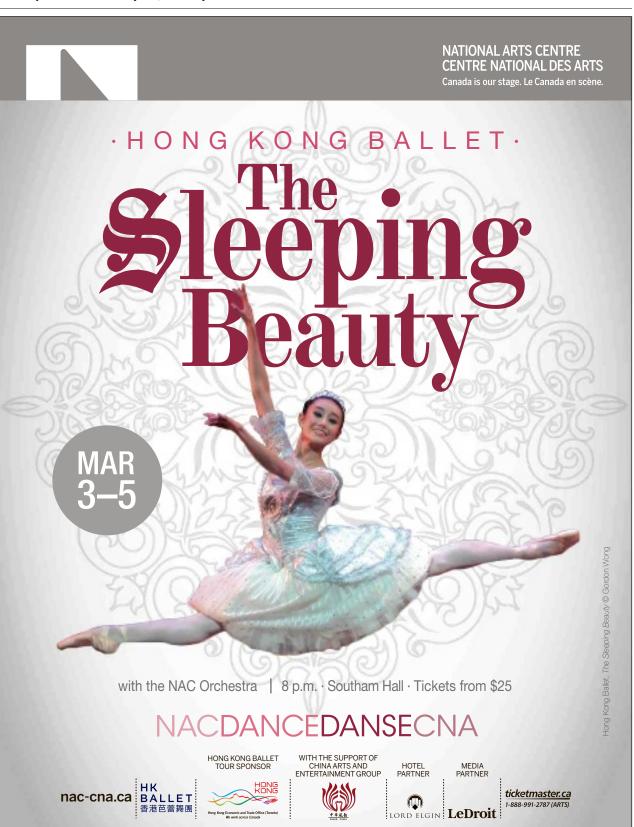

"It's all about what the director gives you in the script because if the director writes it from a certain perspective, that character's going to be different than he was in real life," explained Mackie.

The reality is, I want you to come out of a movie thinking that guy was real and he lived a real life."

If it ended tomorrow

"I did this football movie which I loved, and I never thought it got the attention it deserves, (called) We Are Marshall," admitted Mackie of the role he wants to be most remembered for. "Call it arrogant or whatever but I was good in that movie!"

BEST SPOTS FOR SCUBA DIVING IN CUBA

Over the past 25 years, 80 per cent of the Caribbean's reefs have either died or have severely degraded. However, the lack of economic development and restrictions placed on offshore activities in Cuba, along with a smattering of environmental policies, have saved the coral reefs around the island. Here's five of the best spots. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Jardines de la Reina

The spectacular Jardines de la Reina is the premier dive destination for the Caribbean. It's enclosed in a marine protected area that's 170 kilometres long and 10 kms wide, and it has the healthiest coral reef ecosystem in the Caribbean. Only 500 scuba divers per year are permitted to dive in this undersea paradise. If you can only go on one dive trip in the Caribbean, this is it.

Cayo Largo

If you don't want to put any effort in getting to your dive vacation, Cayo Largo is a great option, as there are direct flights from Canada. You will land close to your hotel and the marina. The dive charters run efficiently, and it's a short sail to the dive sites along the nearby barrier reefs.

Bay of Pigs

If you're fascinated by Cold War history and wall diving that drops 450 metres into the abyss, then the Bay of Pigs is your place. The best dive sites are only a two-minute swim from shore, and they're located between the towns of Playa Larga and Playa Giron. Home to 17 varieties of flat coral, both hard and soft, the deeper you dive, the wider the coral get.

4 Isle of Youth

Punta Frances Marine National Park is tucked away on the remote southwestern tip of the Isle of Youth and formed around a peninsula with protected, white, sun-drenched sandy beaches. The reefs here are in good shape and the fish populations diverse.

5 Trinidad de Cuba

Southwest of Trinidad de Cuba, a UNESCO World Heritage Site, along a starkly beautiful stretch of coastline, there is an area of wall diving with colourful coral and beautiful fish. The walls are punctuated with meandering canyons in parts, some of which turn into beautiful tunnels with coral-overhang where sharks can be seen.

NIGHTLIF

Vancouver raises the bar as a libation destination

On a rainy evening inside an illuminated geodesic dome that adds sparkle to Vancouver's skyline, queues of gussied-up socialites are forming at 25 beverage stations manned by award-winning bartenders.

Patrons of the Science World fundraiser are sipping Mai Tai vapour through straws at one station and shooting glow-in-thedark gin and tonics at another.

"That's the thing about Vancouver — the culture demands more from bartenders," says Tarquin Melnyk, who runs the bar for Bambudda restaurant. The inaugural Science of Cocktails charity, which ran in early February with proceeds providing underfunded schools free access to the landmark science centre, is a testament to Vancouver's spirited drinking scene. Organizers easily served up praise that Vancouver may very well be the cocktail capital of Canada.

Jennifer Ingham, vicepresident of development with Science World believes the city's reputation for lame and cold nightlife is evaporating: "I think the city is becoming less 'no fun." The West Coast metropolis already boasts a renowned panoply of bars and restaurants clustered in distinct neighbourhoods from the swish Gastown to hipster Main Street.

But the city's cocktail resurgence proper started in the mid-2000s, as a small community keen to move beyond pulling pints and slinging highballs began crystallizing, said Trevor Kallies, president of the Canadian Professional Bartenders Association.

"No one asks me what I'm going to do when I grow up anymore. They know I'm still a bartender, they know I love what I do and they know it's working. People are getting it."

A selection of Vancouver's barkeeps have also won international competitions, which translates into "healthy competition" among each other, said Grant Sceney, head bartender at the Fairmont Pacific Rim hotel.

Sceney, who was named the Canadian Bartender of the Year in 2014, attributes his successes to the local industry's collaborative dynamic. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Some popular destinations put a cap on visits

News that Italy's Cinque Terre is set to implement a ticketing system that limits the number of tourists who visit the area is the latest reminder of the privileges and pitfalls that have come with increasingly accessible airfares and mass tourism.

Cinque Terre, located in the Liguria region of Italy, is the latest tourist destination that has been forced to put a cap on tourists in a bid to preserve the integrity of its natural surroundings in the wake of explosive visitor numbers over the last few years.

In 2011, following a torrential rainfall that battered the area, Cinque Terre received 400,000 visitors. That number rebounded to 2.5 million last year, thanks in large part to docking cruise ships which drop off hundreds of thousands of day-tripping visitors in one go.

Last week, a spokesman for the national park and UNESCO

Picturesque Cinque Terre is joining places like Antarctica, the Galapagos Islands and Yosemite National Park in looking to limit the number of tourists it takes. ISTOCK

World Heritage Site announced that as of this summer, visitors will have to buy an advance ticket online in order to gain access to the cliffside trails which connect the five fishing villages.

The aim is to reduce the number of tourists from 2.5 million a year, to 1.5 million.

Cinque Terre is the latest environmentally sensitive area to bear the brunt of mass tourism with the proliferation of low-budget airlines, behemoth ocean vessels and increasingly mobile tourists.

Here are a few other destinations that have either implemented tourist caps or are considering it.

Machu Picchu

In a bid to preserve and protect Peru's fabled and ancient, mountaintop ruins, the country has developed a new reconceptualization project that imposes time limits as a means to control crowd flow and requires visitors to hire an official guide for the trail. For years, experts warned that the UNESCO World Heritage Site was at risk of irreversible damage and degradation from unsustainable tourist numbers. If you want to hike to the top, the government now limits access to the classic Inca Trail to 500 permits a day. That includes support staff, such as cooks, porters and guides, further reducing the number to about 200.

Antarctica

To protect one of the few, final frontiers unspoiled by human activity and tourism, The Antarctic Treaty restricts ships with more than 500 passengers from landing sites. Vessels are also restricted to no more than one landing per site, with a maximum of 100 passengers allowed on shore at a time. A ratio of one guide to 20 passengers must also be maintained while ashore.

Barcelona

Last summer, Barcelona's newly elected mayor Ada Colau made international headlines after announcing plans to curb explosive tourism numbers by imposing a freeze on the development of new hotels and tourist apartments, and creating a preventative policy pre-empting saturation problems.

Galapagos Islands

Described as a "living museum and showcase of evolution," the collection of 19 islands which make up the Galapagos Islands groaned under the pressure of unsustainable tourism numbers over the years, putting it on the United Nations' list of endangered heritage sites. Today, a conservation program has successfully helped it make a solid recovery. To visit, tourists must now be accompanied by a licensed Galapagos National Park Guide and abide by strict rules when visiting the area. Camping is also allowed in only a handful of authorized areas, and requires a permit from park officials.

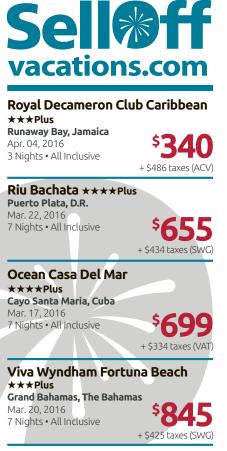

Yosemite National Park

To protect one of America's most beautiful national treasures, the US National Park Service announced measures to cap visitor numbers to 18,710 a day, and 21,000 visitors a day during peak seasons back in 2014. Yosemite was the fourth most visited national park in the US in 2015, and is best known for its waterfalls, valleys, meadows, ancient sequoias, and vast wilderness.

TRAVEL NOTES NEW YORK-PARIS, B.C. AND THE GREAT NORTH

Norwegian to fly New York to Paris nonstop with fares from $175 U.S.

The Norway-based budget airline will start flying a nonstop Paris-New York route with introductory fares starting at $175 US from July 29. Norwegian is also opening Paris-U.S. routes connecting the French capital with Los Angeles and Fort Lauderdale. Although Norwegian is the first carrier to offer such attractive fares between Paris and New York, it isn't the first airline to drive down prices on the popular route. AFP

International tourism to B.C. increasing, province says

The British Columbia government says the number of international visitors to the province is increasing and France is in the top spot on a list of seven countries and regions. Almost 360,000 more international visitors came to the province in 2015, with the total number approaching five million. The ministry is crediting its marketing strategy, along with the province's aboriginal tourism sector and more direct flights. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Quebec to spend $36 million on northern wilderness park

The Quebec government says it will spend $36 million to develop Parc national d'Opemican, a 252-square-kilometre tract of lakes, rivers and old pine forests in the Abitibi-Temiscamingue region along the Ontario border. The work, expected to be completed in about three years, will include the creation of a main park hub, Pointe-Opemican, on Lac Temiscamingue.

More to Washington than the White House

Dupont Circle area known for its art, quirky attractions

The National Mall, a look at the White House and cherry blossoms in springtime are all musts for visitors to Washington, D.C.

But once you've got the essentials covered, consider spending a few hours in Dupont Circle, a neighbourhood with gems that range from a popular indie bookstore to a beer brewer's Victorian mansion. The area also includes a gas station on the National Register of Historic Places and the Phillips Collection, a modern art museum.

Take the Metro to the Dupont Circle stop and look for a white marble fountain in a circular plaza. That's the centre of the neighbourhood. Streets extend out from the circle like spokes on a wheel.

Attractions

The Phillips Collection, 1600 21st St., is probably Dupont Circle's best-known attraction. Through May 8, Seeing Nature offers 39 paintings from five centuries, including Impressionist works and David Hockney's large, colourful 1998 depiction of the Grand Canyon. In the museum's permanent collection, be sure to see Renoir's lively Luncheon of the Boating Party.

The Heurich House Museum, billed as "the brewmaster's castle," is a 31-room home at 1307 New Hampshire Ave., built in the 1890s by Christian Heurich, a German-born beermaker. Heurich was best known for his Senate brand of beer. He survived Prohibition by temporarily turning his beer business into an ice-distribution company, and he was still making beer when he died in 1945 at age 102. The Kennedy Center sits on the land where his factory was located.

Dupont Circle is also home to many embassies. On one block, a white statue of Saraswati, the Hindu goddess of knowledge, graces the Indonesian embassy, while the flag of Portugal flies from the embassy next door.

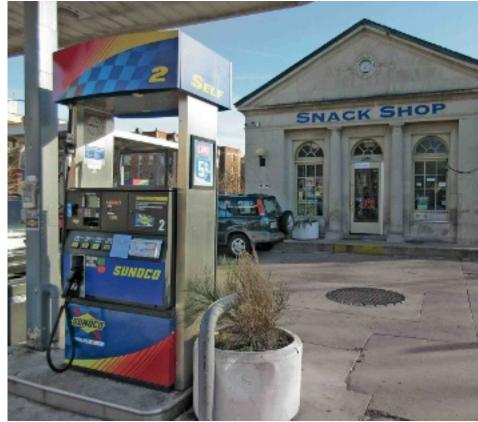

Two curiosities in the neighbourhood: Spanish Steps, a flight of stone stairs at S Street and 22nd Street named for the famous steps in Rome, and a gas station on the National Register of Historic Sites at 2200 P St. across from Rock Creek Park. The gas station was built in 1936 by Gulf Oil to look more like a bank or library than a filling station. It's a Sunoco station today, with "SNACK SHOP" written on the tidy building that helped earn its historic designation.

Shopping and dining

Connecticut Avenue has lots of small, fun shops, including for dog owners, The Cheeky Puppy, 1709 Connecticut Ave.; for women's clothing and accessories, lou lou boutiques, a regional chain with stores at 1601 and 1623 Connecticut Ave.; and beads at Beadazzled, 1507 Connecticut.

On the second floor of 1702 Connecticut Ave., the Secondi consignment store sells designer finds, ranging from a DVF wrap dress for $98 to a Chanel coat for more than $1,000. Second Story Books & Antiques, 2000 P St., draws treasure-hunters with its outdoor carts of $4 books, while Kramerbooks & Afterwords Cafe, 1517 Connecticut Ave., draws crowds on weekends for both books and brunch (try the Cubano sandwich and black bean salad). Drug violators to face tougher entry

The CFL is making it harder for players who violate antidoping regulations to enter the league.

The CFL and the CFL Players' Association say they have agreed to implement stricter rules for offending players to be drafted or sign contracts.

A player violating the Canadian Anti-Doping Program or testing positive for a substance banned by the CFL up to 12 months before being draft eligible will be forced to defer his draft status for one year.

A player going through the draft, regardless of whether he's selected or not, who subsequently violates the antidoping rules will be ineligible to sign a CFL deal for one calendar year from the date of the positive test.

Last year five players who attended the CFL combine tested positive for banned substances. Three were drafted with linebacker Jonathan Langa appearing in 16 games with the Hamilton Tiger-Cats.

A player ineligible for the draft, from either the Canadian junior football ranks or an international player from another football league or sport, who violates the rules will be unable to sign a CFL contract for one year from the date of the violation.

'I wouldn't want to pitch against us'

Donaldson looks forward to season after busy winter

Josh Donaldson isn't worried about the Toronto Blue Jays' offensive potential this upcoming season.

He just feels sorry for opposing pitchers.

The fact of the matter is, you have me, then you have Jose Bautista, who hit 40 homers last year ... then Edwin Encarnacion, who's hit over 40, then Russell Martin ... (Chris) Colabello, (Justin) Smoak ... Tulo (Troy Tulowitzki) — I mean, Jesus, it just keeps going," Donaldson said.

Donaldson, the reigning MVP of the American League, reported to Blue Jays camp Thursday after a jam-packed off-season.

The differences between this year's camp and spring training last year, he said, are "night and day."

Rolling blocks banned

Baseball made its call on the Chase Utley slide: out.

Major League Baseball and the players' union have banned rolling blocks to break up potential double plays, hoping to prevent a repeat of the takeout by Utley that broke the leg of New York Mets shortstop Ruben Tejada during last year's playoffs.

Under the change announced Thursday, a runner must attempt a "bona fide slide," defined as making contact with the ground ahead of the base, being in position to and trying to reach the base with a hand or foot, trying to remain on the base after the slide, and sliding within reach of the base without changing his path to initiate contact with a fielder.

An umpire can call both the runner and batter out for a violation. Baserunners may not elevate or kick a leg above the fielder's knee or throw his arm or upper body. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RECIPE Eggs, Asparagus & Couscous

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh For Metro Canada

This is almost not a recipe at all, which come Friday night is what we all need, right? Tell yourself you're experimenting with one of those trendy grain bowls. Or just sit down and enjoy a speedy dinner.

Ready in

Prep time: 5 minutes Total time: 20 minutes Serves 4

Ingredients

- •1 cup couscous
- 16 asparagus spears
- 4 eggs (very fresh poach best)
- 2 tsp vinegar
- Parsley or chives, chopped

Directions

1. Get three pots of water boiling. One with just a bit of water for the asparagus, a very shallow pan for the eggs and 2 cups of salted water in a pot for the couscous.

- 2. Add couscous to boiling water and stir. It will take up a lot of water right away. After a couple minutes, turn off heat and put the lid on the pot. Leave couscous aside to absorb remaining water.
- 3. Now, poach your eggs. Add vinegar to boiling water. Crack eggs into ramekins. Tip the eggs into the simmering water. Turn off heat, cover the pan and leave alone for 5 minutes.
- 4. In your third pot, put trimmed asparagus in boiling water until they're tender — about 3 to 5 minutes. Drain and rinse in cool water to stop them from cooking.
- 5. Spoon couscous onto your plate, lay down four spears of asparagus then scoop eggs out of the water with a slotted spoon and lay on top. Garnish with chives and salt and pepper.
